THE POLTERGEIST OF CÔTE SAINT-LUC

A True Account.

"I never intended to write a book like this.

For most of my life, I wouldn't have believed such things could happen at all. But experience has a way of correcting disbelief."

For ten years, Jeffrey Mislovitch lived an ordinary life in a quiet Côte Saint-Luc apartment. Nothing seemed out of place. Then a rubber band moved.

What began as small, dismissible incidents escalated into something far stranger. Objects shifted across rooms, doors opened untouched, items vanished and reappeared, and new objects appeared without explanation.

Documented over years inside a single Montréal home, the activity grows increasingly deliberate.

The Poltergeist of Côte Saint-Luc challenges the limits of physical reality.

If one event is possible, what else is?

END OF DAYS

The world ends hungry. A man waits at a cellar door while winter closes in. A city turns its dying into statues. Angels rise from firebombed streets. Vampires meet the daylight they thought belonged to lesser things. Deep beneath Montréal, the walls grow soft with wax and something old wears a human face. There are ruined skies, locked doors, faithful dogs, false saviours, bad jokes, and the awful calculations people make when survival starts answering for morality.

Issue 6 features 10 works by 9 Canadian creators, each bringing their own vision of the END OF DAYS.
